Let's Paddle Our Own Canoe

Our pioneer voyageurs, equipped with some ingredients for making bannock and a lot of determination, paddled their canoes into this country.

Those who came afterward in covered wagons had little better in the way of transportation or supplies. They didn't look to the government for equipment. Sometimes they even lacked protection. But they kept right on hewing out more and more of the wilderness for a place to call their own. And there wasn't a lot of talk about what the government was or wasn't doing for them. They were too busy paddling!

Tipping out of a canoe is dangerous. But when a whole nation goes overboard, little by little, expecting too many services from the government, it can be a catastrophe.

A good government, like a good parent, furnishes adequate facilities for its citizens. It does not strive to provide everything from the cradle to the grave. But it does guarantee the opportunity for people to run their own lives and business, within the rights of all the members of its large family.

Individual initiative can be killed by onslaught from without. It can also die a slow death from within, brought about by a government becoming more and more of a welfare state.

Paddling our own canoe keeps us stronger within, and safer from without.

Devise Method Of Killing Rattlers

MATADOR, Tex. — Two Matador men have perfected a sure thing for capturing snakes. They have the proof in 79 rattlesnakes so far this year.

Their system is simple. They use a long iron rod, some old rags and a can of gasoline. The soaked rags are set afire and forced into the snake den. The heat and the fumes force the snakes out.

Bill Slover and Homer Starkey killed or captured 68 rattlers from one den on the Gerald Waybourn ranch 12 miles northeast of Matador. They brought back alive six of the largest rattlers.

Slover and Starkey use a forked stick when they want to capture a rattler alive but generally they kill them on the spot. Rattlers, they say, often kill livestock by their poisonous bites.

Be Prepared For That Awful Moment You Are Asked To Speak

By KENNETH F. HEWINS
(CPC Correspondent)

When called upon suddenly to make an unprepared after-dinner talk, are you the one to flourish or flounder?

These occasions are as sure to rise as tomorrow's sun. A good dinner has just gone down the hatch when presently the head knocker up at the front latches on to a spoon and starts whamming his drinking glass.

Then the brethren—and/or sisters—manoeuvre their chairs and get ready to ascertain the cause of the alarm, hoping nothing bad is about to happen to spoil the meal just finished.

These spoon-and-glass operators are kept in business at banquets by the qualified and capable contingent of after-dinner speakers who welcome the opportunity.

Those who can accept the call and carry it out to a successful completion are more to be envied than anything else.

On the other hand, banquet halls are full of members, visitors and others who would rather be left alone than to be singled out for a few remarks. They just do not go in for public speaking for themselves.

This type of person, when urged to get up and gush, is more to be pitied than censured.

The admittedly unprepared individual has at least a couple of choices at his disposal. He may bring himself to a trembling perpendicular and advise "I believe I have nothing to say at this time" and sit down. Or he may go on talking and prove it.

Through the years, I have heard persons with "nothing to say" try to work their way out of these after-dinner situations with quotations or tales of "uncertain origin", as the dictionary would classify them.

For instance, there was the fellow who undertook to low-rate after-dinner speaking by saying: "I am inclined to agree with the person who figured that if all the after-dinner speakers in the world were laid end to end, it would be a good thing!"

Another attempt of the non-professional orator to poke fun at after-dinner speaking was this: "Irvin S. Cobb once said that every time he saw an after-dinner speaker open his mouth that reminded him of a good place to throw old razor blades."

One unsuspecting victim of the post-dinner call went back to the love-life of Mark Antony and Cleopatra. After Mark had made a courtin' call on Cleo one night, the eventual quotation allegedly was:

"I didn't come here to talk"—the inference probably being that Mark was interested in sampling Cleo's biscuits and nectar, or something and did not relish a wordy follow-up, even as you after a banquet might not relish.

Another with "nothing to say" sought to win some sort of sympathy in his embarrassing moment by declaring:

"This is rather embarrassing for me, but Abe Martin once wrote that the most embarrassing thing in the world is to walk across the lobby of a hotel to a spittoon and miss it when you get there."

In an effort to impress the audience with the suddenness of this thing called after-dinner speaking, one man told of the little boy in a new pair of pants who fell into a mud hole.

"Why did you fall in the mud with your new pants on?" his mother questioned.

"I didn't have time to take them off," the boy replied.

Those who can handle this after-dinner detail expertly—in their own estimation as well as the appraisal of others—are lucky people. They've got it made, if they want to make something out of it.

All they need to carry on are some entertaining humor, some good philosophy and an offer of sufficient financial inducement.

Those unprepared to answer the call of the spoon and glass might as well be prepared to wiggle out, one way or another, for there will be after-dinner speaking as long as there are clubs, and tables and chairs, and chairmen, and humans come equipped with tongues, vocal chords and shaking knees.

And now, as the saying goes, I thank you.

Normal, Healthy Life Best Polio Protection

Summer vacation time and the knowledge that this is also the season when most poliomyelitis (infantile paralysis) cases occur in Canada causes much unnecessary worry and alarm among parents, according to Dr. Crawford Anglin, writing in the current issue of Health.

Dr. Anglin points out that the relative seriousness of polio has been over-emphasized to the general public, mainly because of its dramatic course in some patients who may die during the acute stages of the illness or may be left with severe paralysis and deformities.

"It should be realized, however, that other diseases not receiving the publicity that poliomyelitis does, are a greater menace to our children," the Health article states. "Whooping cough kills twice as many children in Canada as poliomyelitis, and rheumatic fever has crippled children far more severely by damaging the heart."

To illustrate the actual possibility of developing a recognizable form of polio, the following statistical analysis is reassuring. During a severe epidemic, there is only one chance in 1,500 of developing polio, one in 7,500 of being paralyzed, and one in 30,000 of dying of the disease. Even in patients who are paralyzed during the acute stage, it has been estimated that 50 per cent. recover from their weakness and have no residual paralysis one year later.

"While this information is small consolation to parents of a child who has been left severely paralyzed or has died from poliomyelitis, it is mentioned in an effort to help dispel the panic that occurs among members of our population who may not be aware of the actual facts concerning the prevalence of serious effects of this disease," adds Dr. Anglin.

The Health League of Canada magazine goes on to quote eight rules for the guidance of parents in guarding their youngsters against polio:

1. Any minor illness or fever occurring during the poliomyelitis season should be treated by bed rest and isolation pending diagnosis. It might be poliomyelitis and if it is it can be made more severe by forcing the person to carry on usual activity.
2. Excessive physical strain and unnecessary travel and visiting should be avoided during the poliomyelitis season.
3. Water that might be contaminated by sewage should be avoided for swimming, washing or drinking.
4. Flies should be suppressed and, in particular, food should be protected from fly contamination. All fresh fruit should be washed well before eating.
5. All except urgent nose or throat operations and dental extractions should be postponed until the poliomyelitis season is past.
6. With regard to summer camps, it has been recommended that camps be opened if no outbreak exists in the area, but children should not be admitted from an epidemic region. If a case develops in a camp, new children should not be admitted, but children in the camp should be retained for 14 days after the last contact with the case.
7. Attendance of children at fairs, theatres and swimming pools should be discouraged.
8. In all events, hysteria and panic should be avoided. A normal healthy life should be led and special attention to cleanliness of person and environment maintained.

Pasteurization Of Milk

One of the potent factors in the reduction of sickness and death rates in both children and adults is pasteurization of milk. Health will continue to call attention to the importance of this project in each issue, states the editor, in an editorial appearing in the current issue of Health Magazine.

Pasteurization is a simple procedure involving in it the simplest form of the heating of milk to 450 deg. F. for half an hour with subsequent rapid chilling. The important thing to remember in this connection is that pasteurization will destroy all disease-carrying germs or organisms and that the process does not destroy any of the fundamental nutritional qualities of milk. None of the arguments brought forward by the opponents of this life-saving process has the least validity. In spite of this we are faced with the tragedy that in eight provinces out of ten there is still no province-wide legislation for the pasteurization of milk. It is a reflection on our common intelligence that in only two provinces out of ten—Ontario and Saskatchewan—is it possible to be sure that milk purchased for home consumption is pasteurized and therefore safe.

It is important that in every part of Canada our citizens realize that the only safe milk is pasteurized milk. This journal would welcome suggestions from its readers as to awakening the public from a lethargy which results in danger to the lives and health of our children.

Dangerous Habit

(Lethbridge Herald)

As lovers of fresh air, some children acquire the habit at an early age of hanging out car windows. Not only do they like to get a better view of the countryside, but they very much enjoy waving and shouting at passing cars. The dear little souls undoubtedly don't appreciate the risks they are running.

It goes without saying that hanging out car windows is not a very healthy practice, especially if the car happens to be moving. People have been known to lose their heads while doing so, while others have lost arms or hands.

It is obvious what the dangers are, so we won't bore you with details. Suffice to say that children should be told that they shouldn't hang any part of their body out of a car window. If they cannot be reasoned with successfully, a spot of corporal punishment might do the trick.

At birth a baby elephant weighs from 160 to 200 pounds.

Good Eating Not Speedy, Says Chef

TORONTO. — Canadians are missing out on a lot of good eating because they are speed crazy at the dinner table, a master French chef said here recently.

Antoine Bouillot believes too many housewives try to prepare dinner within two minutes, and too many husbands want to get it down within two minutes.

And it's too bad, he said, because when Canadians want to they can turn out meals that would make even the French ask for seconds.

"You like to do things a little too fast," Bouillot, newly-appointed chef of the King Edward Hotel, said in an interview. "You do not take time to eat. Always, Canadians are hungry, in a hurry."

Women in Europe, he suggested tactfully, "work a little more" at their dinners.

"It's too easy for us to buy so many things and put them right on the fire," he said. "Everything comes canned, pre-cooked or frozen. You can bake a cake in two minutes."

The European housewife, however, puts on her stew in the morning and lets it simmer all day. And when she makes a cake, her recipe says beat for half an hour.

Her husband doesn't expect a meal on a moment's notice, either.

"When a European goes to a restaurant, he reads his paper, he smokes his cigar, he has an aperitif. He doesn't mind waiting 45 minutes or an hour for his order. But some Canadians want to eat right away," Bouillot said.

A cook, he said, prepares his superb specialties only on order. They would be ruined if they were cooked and then kept waiting for someone to order them.

Bouillot has been studying the culinary art all his life. He was only a beginner when he won a gold medal at a Paris Exposition for a work of art in sugar, a bouquet of violets on the corner of a cushion.

"I was very proud, but I have done better since," he said. "But I never use a cook book. It is all in my mind and my taste."

SOME THIEF!

SALINA, Kas.—Claude W. Peters told police a prowler entered his garage and stole two fishing poles and reels valued at $20.

But that's not all—the thief also took a spade from the garage and dug for worms in Peter's backyard.

Defy Detection

The women of Northern Italy have the finest hair in the world. Many sell their hair to makers of wigs. The most expensive wigs for women are made from the hair purchased from these Italian beauties. The best wigs are said to be made by a London firm that has been in the business one hundred and forty years. This outfit claims its wigs defy detection. So, for all you know, sir, some beautiful honey blonde you greatly admire is wearing a wig. I know of the case of a man whose wife wore a wig and he didn't find it out until after five years of marriage. And then only because his wife broke down and told him.

He Couldn't Lose

Are you by any chance an expectant father? Wouldn't you like to know whether it will be a boy or a girl? It would, at least, cut down the argument about what name to give the newcomer by fifty per cent. There is said to have been perfected a new sex-prediction test that is one hundred per cent. accurate. This test enables a sex prediction to be made two weeks after the mother-to-be is pronounced expectant. Some years ago, on the east side of Manhattan, there was a man who offered to predict the sex of an expected child for a fee of five dollars. If his prediction was not correct, he said he would return the money. Which he always did. But, of course, the old boy couldn't help being right about fifty per cent. of the time. So he did extremely well financially until the police caught up with him.

Brain Teaser

Ever hear of Robert D. Towne? He was the originator of the greatest brain teaser in history, the "How Old Is Ann?" problem. It is as follows: "Mary is twenty-four years old. She is twice as old as Ann was when she was as old as Ann is now. How old is Ann now?" Your grandpappy was probably a bit baffled by this problem. How about you? How quickly can you solve it?

No Bridge, No Wedding

A feminine subscriber says there are too many husbands who can't play bridge. She advises all young women to refuse the marriage proposals of men who can't play bridge. She says husbands who can't play bridge, which includes her spouse, are the cause of too many wives missing out on wonderful parties. No doubt there is something to what this subscriber says. On the other hand, many wives are undoubtedly escaping some very boring social sessions because their husbands refuse to play bridge. If a husband refuses to learn to play bridge he probably has some very good reasons for it. I could name several.

Catering to All Tastes

Too many stores clutter up the tops of their counters with too many things. This is especially true of drug stores. The other day I was in a drug store which must have had a thousand different articles displayed on top of the cigar counter. Well, 500 anyway. Also right over the cigars, cigarettes and pipe tobacco was a sign advertising a medical preparation for sale which said: "Stop smoking. Sure cure for tobacco habit."

How To "Place" Your Hits

One of the most important skills every baseball player should develop is the knack of "placing" your hits. The world famous Ty Cobb, who won the Major League batting averages 11 years in a row, was a "place" hitter, so as you can see, it's certainly a skill worth developing.

Here's how. First, get four of your pals who are keen to improve their game too. Have one of them pitch and get the other three to stand as if they were playing 1st, 2nd and 3rd base. Tell them to stand as if they were standing right on the base. Then, tell the pitcher to throw some slow and easy, straight ones your way. The first time try to hit it to the man on 1st, then to 2nd, and finally to 3rd.

To hit at first base swing late and take a step toward 1st base as you swing. A ball on the outside of the plate is the best one to hit in this way. To hit at second base keep your left elbow well away from your side and take an extra long step toward the pitcher just as you swing. To hit at third base take a step toward third base and start your swing earlier than usual, (left-handed batters reverse procedure). Don't try to hit the ball hard. After you have tried three hits at each base let one of the other fellows try it out and continue taking turns in this way until you have all had three turns. Keep score by awarding a point each time you manage to hit the ball right at one of the fellows on the bases. Don't count a point unless the ball goes right at him so he can field it without moving.

This skill really pays off. So go to work right away and include it in your regular practices.

Don't Overplay an Opponent's Weakness

The average tennis player, on finding his opponent's weakness, starts to play every shot he can right at that weakness. This seems like a good idea, but actually the odds are that he will make the weakness stronger as the match progresses. Your opponent also sees your intentions and is ready for a shot to his weak spot each time.

The smart idea is to play his weakness at regular intervals but not all the time. At any rate, remember, don't overplay to your opponent's weakness. Be smart and keep it softened up for when you really need a point.

Avoiding Injuries

Once again we can quote our facts and figures department to the effect that about 50 per cent. of all injuries in Canadian sport are definitely avoidable. We know that many of you are inclined to scorn and scoff at anything to do with avoiding injuries—but always remember this—the smart athlete does everything he can to avoid injury and to take care of any injury he does get. He knows, he is not showing a lack of courage but instead, a lot of brains. Take good care of yourself and you will enjoy a longer, more successful athletic career.

Riding Mountain National Park Manitoba

A picturesque plateau on the summit of Riding Mountain in Manitoba, once the home of the Assiniboine and Cree Indians, is today the site of Riding Mountain National Park. This prairie playground, towering more than 1,000 feet above a smooth patchwork of green, brown and gold Manitoba farmlands, is an area of dense green forests, sandy beaches and woodland lakes. Deer, elk, moose and bear find sanctuary in its heavily timbered uplands, and a herd of buffalo, descendants of the great herds which once ranged the western plains, grazes peacefully near Audy Lake.

Along the eastern boundary of the park, an escarpment which rises 2,200 feet above sea level provides a striking panoramic view of the fertile plains below. Westward, this mountain-top playground stretches for nearly 70 miles, enclosing an area of 1,148 square miles of spruce, pine and Manitoba maple forests, meadows carpeted with wild roses, marigolds and Indian paintbrush, and tiny lakes fashioned by a glacial age.

Wasagaming, centre of summer activities in Riding Mountain Park, is on the shores of Clear Lake, the largest and most beautiful body of water in the park. An 18-hole golf course follows the eastern arm of the lake, and bowling greens, tennis courts, children's playgrounds and an outdoor roller skating rink have been provided for summer visitors. There's plenty of good tourist accommodation at Wasagaming, including hotels, bungalow camps, house-keeping cabins and even a trailer park. Camp grounds, neatly arranged into blocks, face onto Clear Lake and are equipped with shelters, stoves, electricity, running water and central refrigeration units.

Clear Lake offers good pike, lake trout and perch fishing for the angler, smooth sandy beaches for the swimmer and sunbather, and hiking and bridle trails along its 40 miles of shoreline. There are also more than 80 miles of winding park highways to be explored by the motorist.

Riding Mountain National Park is only 125 miles north of the international boundary and less than 200 miles northwest of Winnipeg. The park's southern, eastern and northern gateways are linked to the main provincial highways by all-weather automobile roads.

Saskatchewan's Lakes and Streams Are The Mecca Of Thousands Of Fishermen

From late Spring until Indian Summer, Saskatchewan's lakes and streams are the mecca of thousands of sport fishermen. Whether you like to locate on lakes where fish have never seen an angler's lure, or a mere hundred miles from one of Saskatchewan's cities, we have the spot and the game fish you'll enjoy.

The northern vastness, for instance, is one of the choicest fishing areas in Canada. Rich in unsullied lakes, streams and virgin forests, preserved and maintained by enlightened management, this is the land of the rock-bulging pre-Cambrian Shield. Canadian economists once scoffed at this wild land of river-laced muskeg and bush which stretches across most of our country. They thought it would never be good for anything. But now this vast area of "waste" pours out startling wealth in pulp and paper, mineral and timber, fish and fur. At the same time it is a favourite spot for thousands of vacationists every year. Those economists now hang their heads in shame.

Saskatchewan has a large share of the pre-Cambrian wilderness. Almost the whole northern half is covered by this lake-studded rocky countryside. Here are thousands of cold, clear lakes alive with the best of sport fish. Lake Trout, Arctic Grayling, Great Northern Pike, Pickerel, Brook Trout and Perch all swim in these waters. Here lie Lac la Ronge Provincial Park and Prince Albert National Park, both of which are easily accessible by bus and auto. The remoter northern lakes can be reached by canoe and by Saskatchewan Government Airways, for those who possess the pioneering spirit.

Southern Saskatchewan is not without angling waters, either. Happily spaced across the parkland and prairie regions are eight Provincial Parks each set in wooded lake country. Here the angler who likes his sport with the added comfort of a summer resort can take Perch, Pike, Brook Trout, Rainbow Trout and the famed Loch Leven Trout.

Broadly speaking, that is the range of sport fish in Saskatchewan. The following is a detailed account of where and how each of these fish can be caught. We hope it will be of some small help to you and that you will find good fishing in Saskatchewan.

Of our national wealth, none is more fragile than our wild life. The fisherman's responsibility is not in a written creed, it is in his heart.

LAKE TROUT—This is so universal a fish in northern Saskatchewan that it ranks next to the white fish in commercial importance. He is found in Prince Albert National Park and Lac la Ronge Provincial Park as well as many other deep lakes in the northern part of the Province. There are 107 well-known Trout lakes in this district. Pierce Lake and Cold Lake in the Meadow Lake area should not be overlooked either.

During the heat of summer, July and August, the Lake Trout is usually keeping cool down in the deepest water. One of the ways he can be reached is by trolling with a weighted copper line, employing silver wobblers or the old Arch spinner with minnow impaled. Under these conditions he is not a first class game fish, for he is almost dead from alteration of water pressure by the time he is brought to the surface. Yet, a great many anglers enjoy trolling for Lake Trout.

In May and early June as well as in September, he comes out of the depths to feed along the shoals and shores. It is then that he is a game fish of the first water. When caught on trout fly tackle or by bait casting, a ten pounder is likely to dwarf the electric fighting spirit of the Brook Trout.

RAINBOW TROUT—The Rainbow is esteemed by many sportsmen to be one of the greatest game fish caught in fresh water. He has the furious fighting tactics of the Atlantic Salmon, with instantaneous leaps, long runs and the trick of doubling back.

He is not native to Saskatchewan but was introduced twenty years ago, giving fishermen the chance to match their angling skill against this magnificent fighting fish.

Rainbows are simply young Steelhead Trout that did not run down to the sea to grow up, take on silvery colors and return when mature to fresh-water streams to spawn. They remained in fresh water where they took on more brilliant colors and reached maturity at a smaller size.

They can be found in Frenchman's Creek and its tributary waters in the Cypress Hills region. They will take dry fly and wet fly as well as baits, according to season and river level. Three to four pounders are not uncommon; but a six to eight pounder on a fly rod is an unforgettable experience. Heavy fly rods and reels large enough to carry 300 feet of backing should be used.

With its broad, iridescent, purplish-red band along the side, the Rainbow Trout is well named.

BROOK TROUT—The Brook Trout has been called the jewel among all game fish. While this may be true in some waters where he may have every color of the spectrum on his scales, in other watersheds, he may be so dark that little color is discernible.

This fish is not abundant in Saskatchewan, although he is found in large numbers in Sucker Creek in the Cypress Hills area and in the Fir River near Hudson Bay Junction, Saskatchewan. When hooked, the Brook Trout is not a leaping fish like the Bass, although he may rise clear of the surface in striking the fly.

The most popular equipment is a nine-foot five-ounce fly rod. Standard trout fly patterns in sizes eight to fourteen will serve. In the Fir River, streamers and bucktails up to size six and four, for the large ignorant dandies, are good.

PICKEREL—In northern Saskatchewan this fish is incredibly abundant and provides those fishermen willing to go really north a riot of fishing they are not likely to forget.

He can be found roving about almost all of Saskatchewan's northern lakes. His favourite playgrounds are in large lakes with tributary waters. Sturgeon, Anglin, Emma, Christopher, Emerald, Candle, Little Bear, East Trout and Montreal lakes are all popular Pickerel waters in the Prince Albert district. In the Flin Flon region the best lakes are Beaver, Phantom and Flanagan. Loon Lake, Flotten Lake, Lac des Isles, Greig Lake and Waterhen and Jeanette lakes in the Meadow Lake area are good, too. Around North Battleford the best lakes are Murray, Jackfish, Little Loon and Turtle.

Southward, the Pickerel can be taken in the lakes of Kenosee Provincial Park, Long Lake, The Qu'Appelle Lakes, Madge Lake Provincial Park and almost all their tributary waters, as well as many other lakes.

In early June, when the ice is on its way out, the Pickerel travels with his brothers up the rivers and fast waters to spawn. There is disagreement among angling experts as to whether the Pickerel can be caught during this season. Some argue that he will take any bright lure throughout the day, while others say he is not interested in food at all. However, later in the season the Pickerel resumes his nocturnal feeding habits and can be caught at dusk near the shoals and at the foot of falls using bright lures of the wobbler type, red and white plugs and spinners with minnows rigged behind.

Many of our American friends call him the Walleye.

LOCH LEVEN TROUT—While this is definitely a fighting game fish, he does not do battle on the end of a line quite so vigorously as his other trout brethren. He is not quite so well educated either; he will take almost any kind of lure or bait. But the real purists take him on a fly.

The Loch Leven is not a native of Saskatchewan and was introduced twenty years ago in the waters of the Cypress Hills region. His square tail distinguishes him from the Lake Trout, which has a forked tail.

Five to eight pounders are not uncommon; but a ten pounder on a fly rod will give the most callous angler the shivers.

ARCTIC GRAYLING—The Arctic Grayling is the aristocrat of all northern fish, not only because of his unsurpassed beauty, but because of his electric fighting qualities.

His habits are very much like those of the trout family, although he inhabits waters which are much colder than that where game trout are mostly found. He prefers cold, clear streams and lakes of pure water, with sandy and gravelly bottoms. He is more elegantly formed and more graceful than the trout, and his great dorsal fin is a superb mark of loveliness. His color scheme by itself is something worth angling for.

The Grayling is at his best at the height of the tourist season, July and August. His range in Saskatchewan is in Reindeer, Wollaston, Cree and Athabaska Lakes in the northern part of the Province. The best flies to use are the Professor, Queen of the Water and Lord Baltimore. The Grizzly King, Henshall and Coachman can also be used with equal success on hooks from sizes ten to twelve.

A two pounder will give your rod the best work-out it has ever had.

NORTHERN PIKE—Only since the refinement of fishing tackle and the introduction of light bait casting reels has the Northern Pike been regarded as a worthy game fish. We have enjoyed him on both the line and in the pan.

Pike can be taken north and south in Saskatchewan.

Sturgeon, Anglin, Emma, Christopher, Emerald, Candle, Little Bear, East Trout and Montreal lakes are all popular Pike waters in the Prince Albert district. In the Flin Flon region the best lakes are Beaver, Phantom and Flanagan. Loon Lake, Flotten Lake, Lac des Isles, Greig Lake and Waterhen and Jeanette lakes in the Meadow Lake area are good, too. Around North Battleford the best lakes are Murray, Jackfish, Little Loon and Turtle.

Southward, the Pike is taken in the Lakes of Kenosee Provincial Park, Long Lake, The Qu'Appelle Lakes, Madge Lake Provincial Park and many other lesser known lakes.

He is a notoriously voracious fish and is believed to eat in the neighborhood of one-fifth of his weight daily. Almost anything that moves in or on water will provoke the greedy snap of the Pike's vicious jaws. Plugs, spoons, bass bugs, surface lures or bottom lures can all be used with equal success. He needs no coaxing.

Northward in the remoter lakes of the pre-Cambrian zone where he attains his greatest size, the Pike is found in great abundance. In these rocky, cold waters he is at his best as a game fish too; and that is a mastery stroke of understatement. By reason of their large numbers a ten pounder is an event in most waters, although thirty pounders have been frequently reported.

In Saskatchewan the Pike is called the Jackfish.

SMALLMOUTH BASS—This fish is a favourite for his talent as an aerial acrobat on the end of a line. His terrier-like frenzy has wrinkled the brow of many a stern angler.

The Smallmouth in Saskatchewan is confined to Waskesiu and Heart Lakes in Prince Albert National Park, where he was introduced in 1936. The experiment has proved only moderately successful, and he may require several years yet to accustom himself to his new surroundings.

Although some of the biggest Bass are caught in September, the height of his season is during July and August.

The Smallmouth prefers live bait to artificial lures and likes frogs, crawfish, minnows and leeches. However, the smaller deep-going plugs and lures, bass-fly spinners and, in early morning and evening surface lures, are becoming popular with the Smallmouth. Some real fly fisher purists do take him on bass bugs and floating fly.

PERCH—This underwater gentleman is a prime favourite because he is everybody's fish. He comes to rich and poor, expert and novice. They all stand an equal chance.

He is ready to sample all the baits of the amateur, and the expert takes him both with artificial fly and trolling spoon.

The average weight of the Perch in Saskatchewan is under a pound. However, in Long Lake and Clearwater Lake he grows to a pound or more.

This fish, which has hundreds of thousands of devotees in the United States, is practically an untapped resource here. Almost all of Saskat-

Broken-Bottles Hazard

Motorists toss tons of garbage on to the highways, bottles being a major feature of this discarded rubbish. One result has been the creation of a new hazard—broken glass on the roads. The bill for cleaning up this debris falls on the taxpayer. Dead animals are part of this mess.

Why do people behave like this? The bottles are the outcome of drinking in cars but the rest of it is a heterogeneous mess of things which ought to be put into the regular garbage channels at home.

It is a shocking reflection on our times and our manners that so many of us should behave in such an anti-social way, but we see the same pattern of complete disregard for others in many ways. It is precisely this kind of selfish thinking—to heck with everyone else—that leads to highway accidents.—London Free Press.

Helpful Hints

A cloth moistened with kerosene is excellent to remove soot and dirt from a soiled clothesline.

To keep the area around light switches easy to clean, apply a thin coat of two of fresh, white shellac.

If there is a fruit stain on the table linen try rubbing it with camphor, doing this before wetting the stain with water.

Pushing heavy furniture across a carpet may cause more damage than just lines in the nap's surface. It can break the fibres and also break the backing of the rug or carpeting. Whenever you move heavy pieces, don't just shove; ask someone to help you lift them.

Saskatchewan's lakes and streams are alive with them. He swims in schools and frequents moderate depths.

As a food-fish there is none better in flavour among the commoner kinds.

GOLDEYE—Here is a dish for the epicure and a fish for the most enthusiastic angler. Smoked Goldeye is a delicacy which is highly prized on the tables of most North Americans.

Although the eating excellence of the Goldeye is widely recognized, it is not so well known that he can hold his own as a good game fish, too. He will take dry or wet fly, but the favourite method is by the use of a small float supporting a hook baited with worm, insect or minnow about a foot below the surface. He is taken occasionally, too, on small spinners or plugs.

In Saskatchewan the Goldeye can be found in the North and South Saskatchewan Rivers and in Lake Athabaska in the far north.

Talk About Things Others Want To Hear

If you want to be interesting to other people, don't talk too much about any of the following subjects. You don't have to avoid them, of course, but be content to touch them briefly and then move on to something of more general interest.

The first is your children. Everything they do is important to you and rightly so. But don't expect others to share your avid interest.

The second is your health. It is of utmost importance to you and therefore may seem like a fascinating subject. But it isn't really fascinating to anyone else.

The third is depressing subjects. If you dwell on topics that are generally depressing, others will in time begin to dodge you. Social conversations should make people feel better, happier, more satisfied with life.

When you enter a conversation, try to give it a lift. Don't drag it down to a level that is depressing to everyone.

The fourth is your personal dislikes. Talk about the things you like and enjoy and you will become enthusiastic, interesting and stimulating. Dwell on the things you don't like and you'll sound only self-centered and hard to please.

The fifth is your troubles. Hashing them over with anyone who is polite enough to appear interested is always a mistake. They're interesting to you because they are your problems. They're not interesting to others because they are not their problems. It's as simple as that.

So watch your conversation. You can discuss any of these five subjects. But don't let any of them dominate your conversation. If you do, you can be pretty sure that you are boring the people whose interest you are trying to get. If they don't seem bored, don't let that fool you. That probably only means that they are polite enough to fake an interest that they don't actually feel.

"DILEMMA"

By RUSSELL WILSEY

The Pretty Waitress' Smile
Unnerved Mr. Saxby

IT WAS a dilemma, the sort of situation Mr. Saxby would have taken great pains to avoid, had he known it was coming.

It was Jane's fault, really, he thought, as the subway rumbled beneath the city. If his wife hadn't insisted on that new topcoat, it never would have happened. It was natural for him to mistake one like it in the restaurant.

"Don't forget, Edward," his wife had said, "you get that coat this morning, before it turns chilly. I don't want to fret over your colds another winter."

And so when Frankings, the outside salesman, had phoned in that he would be ill, and it had fallen upon Mr. Saxby's shoulders to make the long trip uptown to see about an order, Mr. Saxby had bought the coat at the first store he found.

The train groaned to a halt and Mr. Saxby bolted through the door. The bulky object in the deep pocket of the coat Mr. Saxby had mistaken for his own banged against his leg. His feeling of terror returned.

Mr. Saxby cautiously reached into the pocket and touched the object, his fingers tingling from the contact. He hadn't noticed it until he was on the subway, heading back downtown. It was a gun.

Mr. Saxby hadn't studied it closely. His eyes had bugged at the sight of it, and then he had jammed it back into the pocket. No one in the subway car seemed to have noticed it. For that Mr. Saxby was thankful. He did know it was heavy and shiny.

The dilemma facing Mr. Saxby was what to do with it. His first reaction, and the one on which he was still operating, was to take the coat, and the gun, back to the restaurant.

Who would carry a gun? Mr. Saxby had asked himself. Certainly not a policeman. The police had hip holsters. And plainclothes detectives always carried them in shoulder holsters. Mr. Saxby read detective stories, and knew this. Only a certain type of person carried one in his pocket!

But what could he do? Suppose he walked up to the policeman on the corner, pulled out the gun, and said, "Here." Why, he might be shot before he could get out another word!

Even if he went to a police station, the desk sergeant might not think much of his story of a coat mix-up in a restaurant. And the police were very strict about guns without permits. In all probability they'd lock him up until his story was checked on. And then if Jane heard about it . . . Mr. Saxby refused to consider the results.

Well, whose coat did he have? Seeing the front of the restaurant again reminded him instantly of the heavy-set, swarthy man who had come in after him and taken the booth behind his. Vaguely Mr. Saxby recalled the man removing a topcoat before he sat down. Of course, that had been the real owner. And something about his looks had disturbed Mr. Saxby even then.

Mr. Saxby reached the restaurant and went in. It wasn't until the doors were swinging shut behind him that he realized what he'd done. Instinctively he'd returned to the restaurant, a place he never wanted to see again.

He half turned, to go out, but it was too late. The waitress was hurrying toward him.

"You came back after all," she said, smiling.

"Yes, well . . . you see . . ." Mr. Saxby halted. Confused, he began to shed the strange coat.

"I thought you'd be back," she went on. "The other man didn't notice you taking his coat until you were gone."

"That's it," Mr. Saxby mumbled, "but there's something I have to explain."

Suddenly, having the pretty waitress smiling up into his face completely unnerved Mr. Saxby. The prospect of being able to reveal his awful secret to a sympathetic soul overwhelmed him.

"I found this in the pocket," he said, gingerly removing the gun. "Oh, yeah," the waitress answered, "that's Joe's."

"Joe's?"

"Uh huh, that's Joe's coat." She took the pistol from Mr. Saxby's nerveless fingers and pointed it at his chest.

"It's his gimmick," she explained as she pulled the trigger.

A cigarette popped out of the muzzle.

"Have a cigarette?" she asked with a smile.

"No," Mr. Saxby said weakly, "no, thanks. My wife doesn't like me to smoke."

"I hear you had a good win at cards last night."

"Yes, thanks to my wife. She hardly put a foot wrong all the evening."

He had no time for his brother-in-law, and was always threatening him. At last his wife took him to task. "It's ridiculous for you to talk like that. You know it will cost you $50.00 if you touch him." When a month had passed and he hadn't mentioned the name of his brother-in-law once, his wife expressed her pleasure. "So you've given up the idea of hitting my brother?"

"Given up?" he snorted. "I'm saving up!"

"Trout? Thousands of 'em," replied the other, enthusiastically.

"Will they?" said Brown. "Why, they're absolutely vicious. A man has to hide behind a tree to bait his hook!"

BRITISH TRAILER
HAS UPSTAIRS

LONDON.—Permanent homes on wheels—They're known as trailers in Canada—have solved the living problems of more than 300,000 people in Britain. The current independent public display of the Caravan Residents Association shows just what can be done with these mobile homes.

Many of the features are familiar to Canadians, such as glass wool insulation, built-in kitchens and bathrooms, hot and cold water systems and convertible furniture.

But among the new types on view here are two-storey caravans. One has two bedrooms upstairs with a central "staircase" from the "entrance hall."

Another model includes a main room that changes with a few adjustments from a buffet dining-room into a settee lounge or a double bedroom.

"DAYLIGHT" STREET LAMPS
CAUSE BIRDS TO SING

CHICAGO—Robins and other birds began chirping and singing at 1 a.m. on one North Side street. Puzzled residents along Sheridan Road found the sleep-disturbing singing came from birds in trees near some new sodium street lights erected recently. The lights give off a blue-white glow which the manufacturers say resemble daylight.

If You Get Lost
While Hiking,
Follow These Tips

1. When you decide you are definitely lost, STOP, sit down and try to figure out where you are.

2. Try to estimate the direction of your last known point of reference, using the sun, moon, or moss on shady side of tree trunks as a rough guide.

3. Follow ridges and water courses down stream—they ultimately should lead you to civilization.

4. Don't try to travel in the dark. Light a fire in a safe place and make yourself as comfortable as possible until daylight.

5. Mark your trail as you go with sticks or rocks to make it easier for searchers to find you.

6. The number 3 is a distress call in any form—three whistles, three flashes on a flash light, or three puffs of smoke from a fire. Forest Rangers are constantly on the lookout for the unusual—they undoubtedly will investigate your signal.

7. Follow the Forest Service's advice—Don't yell, don't run, don't worry, don't quit!

If you plan to hike in strange territory, carry a fishline and a few hooks, matches in a water-proof box, a compass, a little concentrated food, and a strong knife.
